Figure 1 shows Al-Madrasah Al-Mustansiriya in Baghdad. It was one of the most prominent and oldest premises of Islamic Universities in the world. It was established by the Abbasid Caliph Al-Mustansir in 1227 on the left bank of the Tigris (Dijlah) river. The building survived the Mongol incursion in 1258 and was restored. Its library collection was said to have grown to 80000 volumes or more. In 1235, an early monumental water-powered alarm clock that announced the appointed hours of prayer and the time both by day and by night was completed in the entrance hall of the Mustansiriya Madrasah in Baghdad.
